We offer a range of therapies that will effectively treat a variety of problems.
One of the many therapies we offer is counselling...

Life is not always straight forward – sometimes events unsettle us and leave us facing difficult circumstances, sometimes we experience periods of depression, anxiety or grief and struggle with self doubt or low self esteem.

At times like these, counselling offers you the opportunity to talk in confidence to a trained professional who can help you to understand better the issues you are facing and provide support when difficult emotions are stirred up.

Counselling is about empowering you to improve your quality of life - whatever your circumstances.

To find out more, talk in confidence, or to book a taster session please contact Liz Chalmers at the Kent Clinic on 07896 498003 or take a look at her website www.lizcounselling.co.uk

THAMES DITTON & WESTON GREEN RESIDENTS' ASSOCIATION

About the Association

Founded in 1934 our Association is a strong, locally based non-party-political organization concerned with protecting the amenities and furthering the interests of the inhabitants of Thames Ditton and Weston Green. We work to preserve and enhance the best in our attractive environment and the quality of life of everyone in our community.

Through regular meetings, social activities, our magazine and website we keep in touch with residents' views and we raise and spend funds for the benefit of the community, from tree and bulb planting to contesting unacceptable development projects.

With five Residents' Councillors we have a strong voice on Elmbridge Council working with other residents' councillors to ensure that decisions are based on the needs of local communities and on good management rather than on party politics.

Our Residents' County Councillor Peter Hickman represents our views at Surrey County Council.

Tricia and her Ambassadorial team

A summer dominated by the Olympic Games, for which the dreadful wet weather cleared up in the nick of time. It was a joy to see good-humoured and enthusiastic crowds along the routes for the torch-bearing down the river, and the routes for the cycle races.

Tricia Bland writes: “I thought you might like a photo of some of the members of the Surrey Ambassadors volunteering team in Thames Ditton for the Olympic cycle races. Surrey County Council appointed two teams to work in Thames Ditton. I was lucky enough to be chosen as one of the Team Leaders, and with my team of Surrey Ambassadors welcomed visitors to our village, gave out programmes and directed people to the best vantage points along the route to see the races. It was fantastic to see so many from the community of Thames Ditton and Giggs Hill Green out in force. There was an amazing party atmosphere and cheering reached a crescendo on the final of the men’s Time Trial when we all saw Bradley Wiggins pedal to victory. It was fantastic to see Thames Ditton and Weston Green playing such an important part in hosting the Olympic Road Cycling. Such was the success, there are plans to make the Road Race an annual event in

Surrey, tying in with a cycle race in London, over a weekend every Summer.”

Jolly Boatman

The cycle route, in full view of the world’s cameras, passed over Hampton Court Bridge. Bowing to pressure, Gladedale, the owners of the Jolly Boatman site opposite Hampton Court Palace, allowed Palace authorities temporarily to landscape the area. It had been kept an eyesore by the developers for many years, ignoring offers from others to clean it up free. Thames Ditton resident Andrew Roberts and architect Keith Garner have lately submitted a new planning application to landscape the site permanently. This would improve the setting of the Palace and preserve views of the Palace from the south bank of the river, and make the space available for the enjoyment of the public. It has the support of Hampton Court Palace, the Hampton Court Rescue Campaign, Surrey, Richmond, and all who value aesthetics and our national heritage. Over 700 letters of support from residents and elsewhere, including from Surrey CC and Richmond, were filed with the Council, whose planning staff have just granted planning permission as we write.

The new plan is backed by an offer to buy the site from the developers at a reasonable commercial price. The development plans earlier approved now seem to be in difficulties. There are no signs that the developers are ready, or have the financing, to proceed with their overscale hotel on the river bank, and some ugly square accommodation blocks facing the magnificent Tudor palace. It is unlikely that the conditions attached to the controversial permission granted by Elmbridge can be properly met, and in the current climate Gladedale will find it difficult to get buyers for the care home and hotel which are integral to their own plan. But Gladedale, in which state-owned Lloyds Bank has had to take a significant share, has so far refused to sell.

The Harrow

Plans to demolish the Harrow and erect two 3-storey houses and a large chalet bungalow were approved by Bristol-based Planning Inspector Paul Dobsen on appeal. He judged that they fell within the new government planning guidelines for sustainable development. Admitting that any judgment must be subjective, he concluded that the scheme would be acceptable and was “a significant and substantial improvement upon the previous refused schemes.” Although this will not please everybody, the fact is that, yet again, determined and reasoned resistance to the earlier schemes over several years has resulted in a development that is much better than what was originally proposed.

Brabant House

A new planning application seeks to demolish Brabant House, a substantial Victorian house on the Portsmouth Road. This house is not listed, so it is within the owner’s rights to demolish it. Brabant House embodies a significant part of local history. Brabant Villa, as it was known towards the end of the 1800s, was formerly the headquarters of the Kingston Highway Board which managed our roads.

The Local Government Acts of 1888 and 1894 established elected county and district councils, to match local representation with local administration. When Esher and The Dittons Urban District Council was formed in 1895, Brabant House became the seat of our first local council and remained so until 1923, when the council moved to Sandown House. During those three decades, the sixteen elected councillors and a small handful of salaried professional officers made huge progress as water, lighting, public health and decent accommodation were brought to ordinary residents in the area. were bought to lay the dust, gypsies were cleared from the roadsides, recreation grounds and allotments were acquired. Sanitation and piped water for poorer households sorted, hospitals supported. They also took the far-sighted decision to buy first, Giggs Hill Green and Esher Green, later the larger tracts of what had been the manorial commons, for the public benefit.

Those were good, efficient and effective years. But corporate pride is unlikely to stand in the way of demolition now. Another small piece of heritage and history will be swept away, with no more than a dusty record and a photograph or two remaining.

Ba Siam

The operators of Ba Siam, the former Crown Inn, have declined to remove the grim structure alongside the building, erected without permission and for which retrospective planning permission was turned down by the council, and have appealed the planning decision. The legal process will thus take a while to reach its natural and inevitable term. Many residents who feel strongly about the appearance of the conservation area continue to shun the restaurant until the matter is resolved.

Former Cottage Hospital

Here the story is better. The earlier, overly dense proposal to build was turned down, and the appeal confirmed that decision. The developers, Goldcrest, returned with a well-planned and well-presented new application which answered just about all the points of objection raised, and which therefore has been approved by the council. Another constructive outcome from determined and reasoned engagement – and the developers deserve praise for responding well.

Milbourne Pond progress

The wettest summer on record until July conspicuously failed to refill the pond, underlining the points in the consultant hydrologists' report (see last issue). Elmbridge's officers approved that report and will back the proposals. The next step is to drill a short borehole to test the perched aquifer a few metres below the ground surface – the only other viable supply of water. The Association has arrangements in hand to raise funds for this. We'll keep you posted.

Street Lighting

The programme of works has gone very quiet and residents have been asking what's happening in the conservation areas. From the contractors' schedule, the better-quality lights are to be installed in early October. The colour selected is drab green.

“Love Where You Live” misfire

Several residents in Weston Green were antagonised by Elmbridge Council posting notices on lamp-posts in June, as part of a campaign under the wincing catchphrase “Love Where You Live.” The notices stated that “people who love where they live cut the grass verge in front of their house, pull up the weeds, pick up any litter outside their house, tidy leaves in front of their house, and remove nearby graffiti...” Angry residents pointed out that these are some of the very functions the council is paid by taxpayers to perform. And that the notices were much the same as fly-posters, cluttering up the visual environment even more.

Our ward councillors had not been notified in advance, and when they investigated it was to learn that Surrey County Council had initiated a campaign some years ago under the same name. Elmbridge decided to take it forward. An effort in Hinchley Wood had gone well and it was decided to have further ‘trials’ in another couple of areas known for a strong community spirit. Councillors were assured that it was not the intention to get residents to do the work of the council: the wording of the posters gave out completely the wrong message. They were then removed.

Meanwhile, as we do love where we live without being nannied about it, many residents had as a matter of course been doing the very things asked. The episode prompts reflection that it is good for the council to support voluntary initiatives of this kind from residents, but that it should tread carefully when the initiative is its own. Some residents are sceptical of officers spending time on bureaucracy – meetings, notices and glossy pamphlets – which can supplant the real activities the council is supposed to perform. Others are concerned that, as with the Surrey Libraries, pressure is being exerted on residents to perform, unpaid, work that the paid council should be doing itself. Cameron’s Big Society must be carefully distinguished from Orwell’s Big Brother.

Recycling Centres

Leatherhead tip won’t reopen until some time during November. Charlton

Lane at Sunbury is open as usual.

Doings and dates

The excellent Secret Gardens event, organised by Caroline James and Andy Anderson and friends, raised almost £1900 – split between the new organ in St Nicholas Church and funds for the High Street beautification appeal. This delightful and very sociable occasion is wildly successful. There are plans to organise similar events in other parts of Thames Ditton and Weston Green, and Caroline will be pleased to pass on hints and tips to those who would like to organise one in their area.

The annual Queen’s Road hanging basket and window box competition, impeccably organised by Pam Bannister, brings the street’s residents together, with just a dash of rivalry to salt the event. Judging took place on 4 July. This year, to go with the regular judges, Pam persuaded RHS Judge Jim Buttress VMH, vice-chairman of the RHS Herbaceous Plant Committee, to join the team before he went off to judge the Britain in Bloom competition. Despite a poor growing summer, Queen’s Road looked very pretty – as those who visited the Hampton Court Flower Show via the Albany that week will testify. Best Basket was awarded to Susan Driver at No. 65 for a splendid pair of hanging baskets. Best box was a simple, elegant and well-balanced planting of red, white and blue at No. 4 by Julie and Graham Dene.

Prizes were presented by Malcolm Coulter, Manager of The Albany which sponsored one of the first prizes, a meal for two worth £50, and champagne for the runner-up. Squires Garden Centre provided another first prize of equal value in garden supplies and plants, while Class Comedy donated tickets for the runner-up.

Fitness instructor Damien Wood of Colets organised a team some fifty strong for the Capital-to-Coast cycle race, to raise money for the Norwood charity which specialises in providing a supervised independent home and work for those with Down's syndrome. At a fine black-tie dinner at Colets on Saturday 21 July, unusually fit-looking revellers handed over a cheque for just over fifteen thousand pounds. Well done, Damien, and all who participated, sponsored and helped.

Continuing the theme of exercise: lobbying (including by the Association) for the very popular bootcamp run on Giggs Hill Green by Liam Grimley succeeded in beating off a rival outfit from elsewhere in Elmbridge that threatened to disrupt the bootcampers' established schedule. This and some other instances in Elmbridge, however, highlight that as more pressure comes on the use of public land for what are basically commercial activities, the council may have to put in place some regulation to ensure fairness.

HomeSupport Elmbridge (formerly MDHS Household Services), a charity that offers cleaning, relief visiting, bathing, gardening, a laundry service and shopping assistance, enables people with disabilities and older people who cannot help themselves to stay in their own homes. It used to be in Thames Ditton but relocated to Walton. The nominal fee charged to those needing such help does not cover all the charity's expenses, and they are grateful for the donations they receive towards their work. ## Christmas Fair and Party

The High Street Christmas Fair is always a merry occasion with lots of activities and open shops. To date it has been held on a weekday evening. Subject to confirmation by the retailers, we gather that this year it is likely to be on Sunday 2 December in the late afternoon (which will be before our next edition). The change should produce less traffic disruption than is the case on a workday, avoid conflicting with other evening events and make it easier for small children to attend.

The Residents' Christmas Party will be on Saturday 8 December at 7 for 7.30 pm, at the Vera Fletcher Hall. Great food, good wine and enthusiastic dancing to a local band. All are welcome. Tickets will be available from Fiona Elliot on 020 8398 1788 from Monday 5 November. At £32.50 they include a welcoming glass of fizz with canapés, three course dinner and dancing. Wine and other drinks at very reasonable prices on the night.

Local Aviation Heritage

centred on Kingston

The Festival of Aviation held in Market Square, Kingston, over four days in early June was the first celebration of Kingston's leading role in UK aircraft design and manufacture, with Brooklands Museum providing full scale planes and other items. Large numbers attended on all four days, many being former Hawker personnel, keen to share their work experiences.

In 1912, Tommy Sopwith began a famous line of biplanes, including the Camel, the most successful allied fighter in WW1. After post war re-funding and a name change to Hawkers in 1920, Sopwith engaged Sydney Camm as senior designer in 1923 and he was promoted to chief designer two years later. Hawker specialised in biplanes until 1934 when Sydney Camm created the Hurricane monoplane with its high tolerance to battle damage, rapid repair rate and tight turn. 14,500 were made over 10 years, with 2,000 supplied to the RAF by the Battle of Britain, forming 60% of Fighter Command at that time.

Post war production slump met the jet age with Hawker's prototype Hunter under test in October, 1945. This model achieved export orders across Europe and India, with many continuing to be active as front line fighters. In total, close to 50,000 aircraft across many models and variants were built in, or around Kingston, mostly to Sydney Camm's designs. Both Tommy Sopwith and Sydney Camm were knighted in 1953 for their magnificent aviation efforts. Later, successive Government defence changes caused major closures across the industry with only BAE surviving in Kingston until 1992. Kingston University now carries the torch with its School of Aerospace and Aircraft Engineering – the largest in the UK.

Sir Sydney Camm lived with his family in Thames Ditton for 31 years while still at Hawkers – apart from the period 1940-1942 when the family and most of the Hawker design team occupied the basement of Claremont. His last project was the P1127, which became the Harrier jump jet. He died in 1966, aged 72.

Contacting both Festival coordinators recently, they would be pleased to address a local meeting as they realise how really significant aviation has been to the local area. It only remains to fix a date.

David Pascoe

Notes: Thomas Octave Murdoch Sopwith, 1888-1989, an affluent young fellow, set up an aircraft factory in 1912, leasing a roller-skating rink near Kingston Station.

Harry Hawker lived in Long Ditton and began as Sopwith's test pilot. It's said that he lived for a few years on Thames Ditton island but I have no documented confirmation of that.

The P1127, forbear of the Harrier, made its first vertical take-off in 1960 at Dunsfold following development of VTOL jet aircraft by Short/Rolls Royce (the Flying Bedstead and the Short SC1), and Hawker/Bristol Engines.

Sydney Camm was born (in 1893) and grew up at Windsor. Later he lived at Carradale in Embercourt Road. He died on the golf course at Richmond and is buried at St Mary Long Ditton. – Ed.

A Project for the Village

The newly refurbished Old Bakery is in a key position and we'd all like to keep it as a proper shop, selling things that villagers want to buy and fitting in with, rather than competing with, the remaining retailers. There is now a very good chance of achieving this.

You may have noticed that the boards have lately been taken off the windows. A group of villagers have taken a contract to buy the shop on a long leasehold, and seek more investors to put their plan into practice. At present, to keep the number of partners to a manageable number, the minimum figure is £25,000 for which you will acquire a share of the 999-year lease. Your participation will help shape the future of our village.

The plan is to let the shop at a low rent in the first two years to enable a new retail tenant to establish the business. After two years it is expected that the annual yield will be 6% per annum rising further in due course on rent reviews. In this project for the village it is important to get the right tenant – hence the low rental in the initial two years. In some ways it is a unique opportunity for residents to say what shop they would like to see. Ideally the tenant (or tenants) will look positively on ideas to house more than one sort of retail activity in the store, perhaps allotting shelf space to other local retail enterprises.

There have already been discussions with prospective tenants, one of whom plans to have a fresh meat and fresh fish facility.

The project must remain commercially viable. You can expect a return on your equity but should be prepared for your capital in the project to be tied up for the longer term.

If you'd like to do something positive to help your village, please call me on 0208 398 3489 to discuss this most interesting project.

Lamberts of Weston Green

III – General Sir John Lambert

One Monday in July 1782, Catherine Lambert put her ten year old into the chaise outside their house in Brook Street, Westminster, and took him to boarding school: “Carried poor Johnny to the Charterhouse,” she wrote in her diary. From time to time she sent him partridges in season, or perhaps a hare, to eke out school dinners. Charterhouse, then in Smithfield, doesn’t seem to have done poor Johnny much harm. By the time he retired to Weston Green, where the family had its much-loved country house from 1798, General Sir John Lambert GCB had earned the respect of the nation and his soldiering peers in the thick of many an historic action, including the battle of Waterloo. He was no armchair general, nor creeping courtier. Twice thanked in Parliament, he knew defeats as well as victories during 34 active years in the field. Then age, honour and senior rank claimed him for home posting and ceremonial occasions. Throughout his most distinguished career he remained, like his brothers, a decent fellow.

General Sir John Lambert GCB, survivor of New Orleans, Waterloo, and Charterhouse. Painted by Salter in the Waterloo Banquet series and supplied by descendants of his brother George.

The second of Catherine’s five warrior sons, at 18 he was commissioned as an ensign in the First Regiment of Foot Guards in January 1791. In war against the expansion of revolutionary France, he served in the Duke of York’s forces at the siege of Valenciennes in 1793, and took part in a brilliant action at Lincelles where a thousand Guardsmen defeated a much larger, well-positioned force. He fought at the siege of Dunkirk that August, which had to be abandoned with heavy casualties, the British positions rendered difficult when the enemy opened the town sluice gates and flooded the surrounding fields. Fever broke out. Eventually the British force on the Continent was beaten back and had to be evacuated.

John Lambert was promoted Lieutenant and Captain on 9 October 1793 and made Adjutant of the Guards' third battalion the following year. Home posting saw his début in cricket in July 1794, mainly for the M.C.C. when spared from military duties. It was an era of bumpy pitches. Alas his averages were not good – in eighteen first-class innings, batting at the tail (he does not seem to have been a bowler either), he averaged less than two and a half runs despite four not-outs. His last first class match, for Lord Beauclerk's XI, was against the XI of Edward 'Skirmish' Bligh, a great batsman who later retired to Ditton House and is buried at St. Nicholas. Lambert scored 0 and 9.

In 1798 troubles arose in Ireland when, after some years in which the United Irishmen had treacherously colluded with the enemy, France, martial law was imposed in much of the country and uprisings broke out. Thousands died in this most violent episode in Irish history. Catherine Lambert wrote on 11 June: "Rec'd the unpleasant intelligence that John was ordered to Ireland." One of the conspirators' leaders, since much romanticised, was Lord Edward Fitzgerald, brother of Lord Henry Fitzgerald at Boyle Farm. That may be why, when the Lamberts bought Weston House a few weeks after Edward Fitzgerald was shot in Dublin resisting arrest for treason, Catherine omitted the Fitzgeralds from her introductory calls. It would be eighteen months before Lady Charlotte (Boyle) Fitzgerald, and Lady Sophia Fitzgerald who then lived at The Lodge in George Road – now called Watts Road – themselves took the initiative to establish social relations.

The following March, returned from the Emerald Isle, John Lambert paid his first visits to Weston House. A kind brother, he would arrive bearing dresses and other gifts for his young sisters. By the end of August he was with his battalion among British and allied Russian forces landing at Den Helder in Holland. After initial successes, they were beaten back and again John experienced evacuation, arriving at Yarmouth on 31 October 1799 to the relief of his mother, who had followed the action by letter. Ten days later he was reunited with the family in Weston Green. Commissioned Capt & Lt. Colonel in 1801, his prospects of further action dimmed for a while when the Peace of Amiens was signed in March 1802. It was to be short-lived. John spent much of the next few years at camp and on Guard duty in England, and deployed on the East Coast where Napoleon's invasion was anticipated. He considered exchanging his commission, but thought better of it. Meanwhile his younger brother Samuel Lambert, who as a teenager showed great prowess shooting game on the farmland around Weston House, had followed John into the First

Foot. In 1806 he was deployed to Sicily, where John subsequently joined him, in what Sam described in his journal as “An Expedition to Annoy Napoleon.”

Things on the Continent were heating up. In 1808 both John and Sam were sent to Northern Spain to join the forces under Sir John Moore where again, after early progress, a determined French counter-attack drove them back. After a harrowing retreat, pretty close to a rout, across the wintry mountains, the remaining British were evacuated from Corunna. Sir John Moore was hit by a cannonball during the rearguard action, with time for some memorable last words as he lay dying. With relief, Catherine wrote in her diary on Tuesday 24 January 1809: “Rec’d at two in the morning an express from Henry, acquainting me with the disasters at Corunna but that his dear brothers were safely embark’d.” Captain Henry, the third brother and the fiercest of the naval Lamberts, had just brought the new frigate Iphigenia back from escorting a convoy to Newfoundland, where (he wrote to his mother) he lost his foremast in a gale.

After a few months, John and Sam took part in yet another British invasion – the huge Secret Expedition to the island of Walcheren. The aim was to dominate the river Scheldt and the approaches to the naval harbour of Flushing. This time, Catherine had three sons in the thick of things, for the youngest, thirteen year old George, had joined the Navy at the start of the year. He was midshipman on the Eagle, 74 guns, under family friend Capt. Charles Rowley – one of over 500 ships in the invasion fleet. Meanwhile Henry was heading for the Indian Ocean and the Mauritius campaign, while the eldest son Robert was beached at Weston House desperate for a ship.

Autumn is on the way

which seems strange since, as I write, Summer hasn't properly arrived and the Olympics are only just getting into their full stride.

You may have noticed that not much has been happening at our office (sandwiched between The Angel Inn and Guy Salmon) for quite some time. You could be forgiven for thinking we had disappeared altogether but in fact we have been operating in temporary offices in Esher while our home/office is put back together after a fire the week before Christmas.

We couldn't have imagined, back then, that it would be almost 7 months before we returned to Thames Ditton and I can certainly say that we are enormously happy to be back. Lovely though Esher is, Thames Ditton is just SO much better and in the immortal words of Dorothy from The Wizard of Oz "there's no place like home".

Dealing with the insurance claim has been a whole new learning experience—a very long and laborious one—and we would like to pass on something that we were unaware of. It was a great surprise to us that the cost of the initial clean up after the fire was to be taken out of the house contents cover element, not mentioned in the small print but "implied in the terms" as I was informed by my broker after having complained to the loss adjustor. We had initial costs from two specialist recover companies which came in at around £12,500.

In the end our own team of trades people did it a lot cheaper but be aware, if you have a fire or suffer a flood, most insurance companies will seek to recover this essential expense from contents—we will be doubling ours just in case!

After early gains the campaign went badly, and Lt. Col. John Lambert suffered his fourth evacuation. Many died from Walcheren Fever, including tall young Edward Morant, a close friend of the family in John's regiment. Sam also returned with the fever. Breaking off a visit to Warwickshire, his mother dashed to London to help him recover. In early 1810 Sam was fighting in Spain again. Catherine noted: "On ye 5th of March he was engaged in a most glorious action under Genl. Graham on the Plains of Barrosa, where our Troops gained a Victory over the French." Young George on the Eagle was involved with naval support operations at nearby Cadiz. With Sam returned to England, it was John's turn to be deployed to Cadiz, in command of the Guards' third battalion, on 30 May 1811. Promoted Colonel in the Army, in January 1812 he commanded two battalions at Carthage before joining Wellington's forces at Salamanca for the significant victory there. The following June, John was promoted Major-General, and commanded the sixth Division at the battles of the Nivelle (10 November 1813), Nive (9-13 December), Orthes (27 February 1814), and Toulouse (10-12 April). Two days later, Lt. Col. Sir Henry Sullivan of Ditton House, second Baronet of Thames Ditton, was killed in action with the Coldstream Guards at Bayonne. John Lambert was twice mentioned in despatches, received the thanks of Parliament and was knighted.

The brief peace which followed these victories over the French, with Napoleon's exile to Elba, allowed more resources to be diverted to fight the Americans, who in mid 1812 had taken advantage of British preoccupation with Europe to declare war.

At the turn of that year John's brother Henry had lost his life in an aggressive but unsuccessful action as captain of HMS Java against the heavier and more powerful American frigate Constitution. In late 1814 Major-General John Lambert was sent across the Atlantic with reinforcements for the army. They arrived in time to constitute a reserve force for General Pakenham's disastrous attack on New Orleans on 8 January 1815, where a comparatively small force of American artillery in hastily-fortified defensive positions cut to ribbons a much larger, but over-confident and inefficient British force. With Pakenham killed and Major-General Keane wounded in the carnage, John Lambert took command and after brief further fighting, bowed to reality and ordered the retreat. He then took Fort Bowyer on 11 February – just before news arrived by messenger that a peace agreement had been signed at Ghent seven weeks before. The ignominy of New Orleans had been in vain.

The forces under John Lambert were ordered to sail from the States to Europe. There was not a moment to lose when Napoleon escaped from Elba on 26 February 1815. Now a very experienced soldier indeed, and well known to Wellington, John was appointed commander of the 10th Brigade. He marched them in haste from Ghent to Waterloo. A visitor today finds it hard to conjure up anything but restful charm from the gentle grassy fields and slopes at Waterloo. But as a guest of the Belgian military I once spent a day viewing a lively re-enactment of the whole battle. It left a deep impression.

On Sunday, 18 June 1815, the Tenth Brigade reached the battlefield in the nick of time only that morning, and initially was kept in reserve. By mid-afternoon it was in the front line. In all, the Tenth suffered casualties of 39 officers and 795 men – nearly one third of its complement. Almost half of those were from the 27th Foot, part of the Tenth holding the road near the farm of La Haye Sainte – a heavier loss than any other regiment. The husband of John's sister Maria, Major Henry Graham, a cavalryman, was killed in a desperate charge with the King's Regiment of Dragoons. John Lambert was mentioned in Wellington's despatches, and received the thanks of Parliament again as well as honours from Russia and Bavaria. His own regiment acquired the name Grenadier Guards in honour of their victory over the French Grenadiers.

Now John was given command of the 6th Infantry brigade in the army of occupation in France, headquartered at Cambrai – complete with eighteen couple of hounds. Their Master and owner, his secretary Capt. Smith, was summoned one night by Wellington, who spread out a map. On it were carefully marked all the local fox coverts, with the intelligence that there were too many foxes in all of them.

While there was plenty of sport, an active service life had left little time for John to go courting. In October 1816, aged 44, he married Jane Morant, 27, a close friend of his younger sisters and long a protégée of his mother. The Morants were a family from the Jamaican plantocracy, who in the 1700s had parlayed some of their money into a large chunk of Hampshire and a seat in parliament. In a letter to an old family friend, the admirably laconic Catherine described her second son as “very well- looking, but not tall & in figure very like his father,” and Jane as “a fine young woman, stouter than I ever expected her to be.” He might have been a late starter, but the couple set about producing at least seven children at a brisk pace, five of whom survived.

To this point, John seems to have relied on army accommodation or lodgings and was a frequent visitor to Weston House, and to the family houses in London and Brighton. As far as I can discern, he had then no income but his officer's pay. Distributions of the spoils of battle were generally less than the opportunities of prize-money in the Navy. Distinction, rank and marriage, and quite possibly Jane's dowry, meant a household. To complement his foreign postings, from time to time he rented country places including the Elms (according to a previous occupant whose father researched the house), and now he rented a house off Portland Place and part of Beauport Park in Sussex, where his sister-in-law Charlotte, Robert Lambert's wife, died in 1818. We read in the Morning Post of 5 January 1821 that two men robbed him of his wallet in the Strand. Being a General is no immunity. Shortly thereafter he was posted to Ireland to take command in Munster, headquartered at Cork. Jane went with him, adding more children to the family during their posting.

It was a time of the Troubles. The Irish Whiteboys stole weapons (and lead from roofs in order to make bullets), and organised a guerrilla campaign of murder and attrition, disrupting mail coaches and killing officials. From the extensive press coverage of the time, it is clear that John Lambert, with immense experience including his earlier tour to rebellious Ireland, handled things firmly, well and with sensitivity. He led from the front – on at least one occasion himself leading a smallish detachment of troops in combat with insurrectionists. In the archives there are also examples of his decency. For example, presiding over a court-martial in September 1821 he pardoned all six army prisoners convicted by the court, in consideration of their character.

A long tour in troubled Ireland ended in mid 1825 when he was promoted Lt. General and brought home. Cork's farewell to him was notably fulsome: "...his conduct as an Officer has been uniformly marked by sound judgment and discretion; and as a Gentleman, by the most perfect urbanity and conciliatory deportment ...his kind and affable manners, and his unostentatious but munificent benevolence, have endeared him to all ranks of society."

After a highly operational career spanning 34 years, many of them bloody, John Lambert was now doomed to professional life in his Number Ones. Royal Levees, Waterloo Banquets; ceremonial occasions like accompanying Wellington to lay the foundation stone of the new Waterloo Barracks at the Tower of London; and the coronation of Queen Victoria. His son's manuscript note records that he took command of the Household Division at that ceremony; brother Sam commanded the First Battalion of the Grenadiers for the occasion. John was very well connected. His widowed cousin Sophia had remarried, to Colonel Henry Greville. The Colonel's younger brother Algernon Greville had been John's aide-de-camp in occupied France, then Wellington's ADC and in due course Private Secretary to the great man as Prime Minister. In his later years we find a peppery John writing to the papers to rebut scandalous American allegations about New Orleans. He was quoted as an authority in Parliamentary debate on the Irish question, affirming plainly what government hardly wanted to hear, that "the great cause of the disturbances in Ireland was the system of ejections, and they again were caused by the want of a system of Poor Laws." He did his bit for the local community on the Building Committee for the St Marylebone Parochial School for Girls.

Domestic life also bloomed. There were trips to fashionable Margate with the family; and John enthusiastically embraced technological advances. Newspapers reported him taking the new steam-packet for a family holiday on the Continent, and enjoying a ride of 21 miles from Hyde Park corner to Slough in an hour and twenty minutes, in the new steam carriages of the British and American Intercourse Company. At various periods he rented Stanmore House in North London, where his mother Catherine died in 1832, and houses at Baker Street and 2, Harley Street in London. He put his eldest son John Arthur, to whom Wellington had stood godfather at christening in Cambrai, into Harrow. It must be difficult growing up in the shadow of a distinguished father. The boy got a good leaving report, joined the Grenadier Guards like his father, was presented to His Majesty by General Sir John at a Levee in 1836, and became a Lt. General himself in due course. Like his father, he took up cricket for the MCC, but did rather worse. Although his battalion

(which he later commanded) fought at the battle of the Alma, when I consulted the Grenadiers they had no confirmation of his participation; and John Arthur Lambert's obituary in the Surrey Comet following his own eventual death at Weston House in 1887 states that he was never fortunate enough to see active service. He never married.

With the death of General Sir John's elder brother Admiral Robert Lambert in 1836, Weston House passed for a few years to the occupation of Robert's widow and the youngest brother George, by then a Captain with a young family. At the turn of 1840-41 Sir John, who had been made a full GCB in 1838, rented The Newlands on the other side of the Green, and when George got his next ship in 1845, John and family moved into Weston House. By the time John arrived in the parish for good, the vestry had ground to a halt, some key areas of local administration being taken up in Kingston. He did serve on the Thames Ditton School Committee of subscribing Governors. General Sir John Lambert died at Weston House on 14 September 1847, aged 75. He had served this country with honour, and was deservedly honoured in his lifetime. His Military Secretary at New Orleans and

Waterloo, who became General Sir Harry Smith, later wrote of John in his own autobiography: "he was one of the most amiable and moral men in the world."

It was at the new church of Holy Trinity Claygate, and not St Nicholas, that his family chose to bury him. Readers of 'The Scandal' in this magazine last year will immediately deduce a likely reason for that. A substantial tomb, its inscription not yet eroded, is located to the immediate right of the church as viewed from the road. Jane, who lived on at Weston House with their family for another seventeen years, lies there with him.

While he was born into the gentry and was not poor, I cannot help but notice from his will that despite the significant services he rendered to this country for an officer's pay, John Lambert did not die rich. His share of Weston House, left to the surviving siblings by Robert; four thousand pounds or so; and the residue of interest owing on his share of his mother's former plantation in Jamaica, now much reduced in value. Not all that much to provide for his widow, two sons' commissions, and dowries for three daughters. But that's public service.

State of Play

“I’m uneasy about this,” said the new Foreign Minister as he perused the draft press release about his appointment. “He combines the integrity of a banker, the honour of a politician and the scruples of a journalist... Where’s Purvis?” “Arrested, Secretary of State, for tweeting that President Assad has let his father down. Looking at a year minimum. I’m Ena Goodplace, your new Director of Creative Corporate Communications.”

After Eton and the City, the Minister had spent a couple of years in a PR consultancy and knew all about reputation management. Then politics had beckoned in the shape of a superb lobster thermidor at the Carlton. A small man in his late fifties, prone to rudeness and fits of temper, no woman had ever fancied him. He was still single and with much to prove, especially after the photos of him partying naked in Swindon.

“Well, Goodplace, take out that bit about the banker. Add a couple of lines for the human touch: ‘He was devastated to be voted off Strictly Come Dancing. The show had changed his life. It meant everything to him and he had really, really wanted to make the second round for his old Gran’s sake.’ And tell them I’m passionate about... something. Now give me a SITREP.”

“Right, Secretary of State. Tehran: need to tread carefully. They are threatening sanctions. Our main supply of pistachios would be cut off. But it was unhelpful to describe Iran as full of nuts. Europe: we’re totally bogged down over whether Her Majesty should shake hands with Merkel, who will visit to collect the Innovative Sausage Of The Year Award. And Scotland... Most of the green bits can be sold to developers before independence. The proceeds will fund the exciting new sports stadium in Kabul, and the replacement of Union Jacks worldwide by the new flag.

“However, the most important thing in your diary is the ‘Let’s Talk Foreign Office’ Roadshow. This inspirational event brings together citizens, service providers and ministers to collectively have a conversation about foreign affairs. Listening to what our citizens think is extremely important so that we can tick the consultation box.”

“Leaving aside the dreadful split infinitive in your penultimate sentence, I note you say ‘listening’,” observed the Minister; “but I trust there is no chance of actually changing our policy because of what they say?” “Of course not. We’ve had to alter the format. A couple of years ago we held public meetings where they could question policy and debate with us. They were well attended. But the pestiferous public persistently put problematic posers. It was all far too embarrassing.

“Then we came up with the absolutely epic idea of marketing our Brand by, well, having market stalls with meme-themes and award-winning virtual mood boards, where people could ask questions out of earshot, if they really must. That way, we avoided debate in public. ‘Minister’s Marketplace,’ we called it. Sheer genius. Astonishingly, nobody came.

“So now, to ensure some passing audience in the background, we are holding a Roadshow at a busy shopping centre up the Thames. It will be geared towards families, with free face painting, giant Jenga and other big outside games to play with. There will be crafts activity and other fun and games. The new aircraft carrier, converted for the Olympic deck quoits event, is unavailable but the Navy has offered us HMS Diversity, the second largest of our three warships. It can be got up the river as far as the new bridge at Walton. There will be a competition for schools to design a new colour scheme for the ship – anything but pink, which is what it is currently painted.”

“Unbelievably exciting. I gather it’s just back from operations, with an impressively suntanned crew.” “Quite so, Secretary of State. Battle-hardened. A most successful campaign. They distributed millions of leaflets up the Orinoco urging the natives to take regular exercise for their health. On biodegradable paper, in sixty different languages including Urdu, I hasten to add. Children will be invited to try out the ship’s award-winning fully accessible fire control system, built by volunteers.

“We will also be giving out goodie bags and food and drink tasters. There’s an interactive game modelled on Big Brother where people can vote on which country to bomb next. All this will enhance our brand visibility, use up the huge budget underspend and enable us to say that we have bent over forwards to ensure consultation. Above all, it will distract them.

“And by the way, here’s our new award-winning notepaper. The lion and unicorn is completely passé. Now we’ll have David Beckham’s head in profile over the motto *Dum Defluet Pecunia**, with the logo ‘FCO is Fantastic!’ “

“Brilliant. Almost iconic! Where did you learn the business?” “In local government, Secretary of State.” And although his new D3C knew nothing of cricket, the Minister was sure the nation was safe in her hands.

**The motto may be rendered as ‘until the money runs out.’ It is uncannily similar to the Elbridge motto Dum defluent amnes – ‘while rivers run’. The author avers that this and the eerily familiar description of the Roadshow are no more than subconscious – and meritorious – inspiration.*

In our real world, state servants in both the FCO and Elbridge are very responsive to residents, and will not mind gentle ribbing. Indeed, they should win an award. – Ed

West End Theatre On Your Doorstep

Newcomers to Thames Ditton are amazed to discover the Theatre in Thames Ditton on their doorstep in Embercourt Road at the Vera Fletcher Hall. Not many small theatres, let alone village halls, have been able to attract stars such as Petula Clark, who is the Hall's Patron, Dorothy Tutin, John Julius Norwich, Virginia McKenna, Covent Garden opera star Donald Maxwell, Louis de Bernières of "Captain Corelli's Mandolin" fame, Rodney Bewes, the Royal Shakespeare Company with their "Shakespeare Review" and Hugh Bonneville of "Downton Abbey" fame.

This July Charles Court Opera's "La Boheme", sung in Italian with Welsh National Opera star Shaun Dixon, was sold out. A member of the audience congratulated us and said he had been to the ENO the previous evening to Porgy and Bess and "wondered whether we could cope with the change of pace, but we needn't have feared: it was La Boheme which left the lasting impression". Fans of Charles Court Opera will be happy that they return with "Pirates of Penzance" on Saturday 6 October.

19 October – Rodney Bewes: A Boy Growing Up

Local violinist Amy Tress has brought up-and-coming prize-winning musicians to the Hall and we have a treat on Friday 26th October with a concert by her Mira Quartet including Brahms, Dvorak and Frank Bridge. Our music theme continues, on a lighter note with the

Goldman Ensemble on Friday 12 October in “Piano Recital – (Piano not included)” based on a true story of exceptional musicians waiting in St. Martin in the Fields for their pianist to join them, and waiting... waiting... But the show must go on. Visit youtube.com/Goldmanensemble and you will rush to buy your ticket!

Our successful Strictly Sunday shows welcome back Andrew Brewis on 30 September with his “When Peggy met Ella” – a celebration by top jazz singers Sarah Moule and Shireen Francis of the life and music of Peggy Lee and Ella Fitzgerald in a wonderful programme of favourites. A new company to the Hall, Isosceles, brings us “Probably the best comedy songs in the world ever, maybe” on Sunday 25 November described by Time Out as “An evening of consistent laughter”.

Regulars will remember Michael Friend Productions’ splendid “Gaslight” and we welcome him back with “Duet for Two Hands” on Friday 28 September, a gripping thriller, first shown in 1945 and since then on Broadway and in television adaptations with Eric Portman and Denholm Elliot as the surgeon who replaces his patient’s hands with those from a convicted killer, which then seem to take over his personality.

Our theatre programme continues on Sunday 14 October with Tacit Theatre’s “Canterbury Tales” which has received rave reviews in Time Out and the Evening Standard: “Good bawdy fun”. In an explosion of live folk music, story-telling and general mischief, a collection of rogues, wenches and travellers tell their stories to entertain each other on their pilgrimage to Canterbury. From the antics of adulterous lovers to the revenge of cuckolded husbands, the characters remain as recognisable today as they were in the 14th century.

Many will welcome Rodney Bewes’ return on Friday 19 October in “A Boy Growing Up” direct from the Edinburgh Festival. Based on the broadcast stories of Dylan Thomas, this was a triumph in New York and London in the fifties with actor and playwright Emlyn Williams.

Our children’s programme sells out early so don’t delay booking. On Saturday 13 October Little Angel Theatre Company – described as “the UK’s National Theatre of Puppetry” – brings “Handa’s Surprise”, based on the well-known children’s book, with puppetry, dance and songs and Handa’s encounters with ostrich, zebra, elephant and giraffe. This is for very young children, 2½ to 5 years, as their first introduction to theatre. Image Musical Theatre are regular visitors and on Saturday 24 November they bring their family participation musical “Pinocchio”.

The Christmas season is celebrated on Friday January 11 with Charles Court Opera’s “The Three Musketeers” a swash-buckling and toe-tapping pantomime, full of fun and musical treats from pop to opera with some of the UK’s best young opera talent.

Mess-up. With humble apologies to crossword fanatics, the clue for the real 25 across was inadvertently omitted – aarrgh!

As it should have been practicable to complete the crossword minus the full word for 25 Across, the competition stood. Indeed, rather amazingly one reader did correctly guess that word (brilliant, Helen!), but had an error elsewhere – though an almost admissible one. There were no correct entries, leaving aside the clue snarlup.

Let’s hope the Autumn crossword is trouble-free...

By Hook or Crook

At an engagement party a few weeks back I found myself chatting to a fellow guest. You probably know how these conversations go – after we had covered how we knew the couple, we moved onto the ‘what do you do’ question. “I’m an estate agent” he told me, then paused for effect whilst he rolled his eyes. Before I could say anything the next statement completely threw me: “I know, everyone hates estate agents but at least I am not a banker!” he announced proudly.

Luckily for me he was too self-involved to reciprocate the question as I happen to work for an Investment Bank. I am a ‘business analyst’, which is a fancy way of saying I work in IT, i.e. configuring computer systems and such like.

This got me pondering though – where did it all go wrong? How did I end up in a profession that is now shunned? When I left university – banks attracted the cream of the crop. Personally, I lacked the interview nous to get into an investment bank and ended up at a management consultancy where I grafted for 5 years, often doing 70-80 hour weeks, before I managed to secure a role at an investment bank. And here I am, another 7 years later, and by implication I should be ashamed of my profession.

Well I am not. I fully acknowledge that the current economic mess we are in is due in no small part to greedy investment bankers. I further acknowledge that some of the scandals, such as the LIBOR fixing, are reprehensible.

But, as I said, I work in IT. If you would blame the person that provided the tabloid journalist with a pen and a notepad then you would also blame me as some of the systems I have worked on can be used to capture those crazy trades you hear about in the press. Then again those same systems are used to book the more normal trades that help the limited amount of money we have in the world circulate more freely.

So if you see me at the train station or in the village (we ‘bankers’ are easy to spot – we always wear a pin stripe suit and a bowler hat!) – then please don’t cross the road. I promise we are not all bad!

Village Voices:

“If you owe the bank £100, that’s your problem. If you owe the bank £100m, that’s their problem.”

“Old bankers never die. They just lose interest.”

“Two biggest problems with banker jokes: bankers don’t think they’re funny, normal people don’t think they’re jokes.”
